WELCOME TO AJACCIO

Ajaccio is the capital of Corsica and is located on the west coast of the island. Corsica is the fourth largest island in the Mediterranean Sea and lies 105 miles from southern France and 56 miles from northwestern Italy. It is separated from Sardinia by the 7-mile Strait of Bonifacio.

The island was under Carthaginian influence and domination until 237 BC, when it was taken over by the Roman Republic. It remained under Roman domination until its conquest by the Vandals in AD 430, and later by the Byzantine Empire in 522.

With the collapse of Byzantine control, the island came under various influences, including Arabs and Lombards, before it finally fell to Genoa in 1284 following the Battle of Meloria against Pisa. Despite take-overs by Aragon 1297-1434 and France 1553-1559, the island would remain under the Genoese until sold to France in 1768.

Except for brief periods of occupation by the British 1794-1796 and the Italians and Germans 1942-1943, Corsica remained a French province thereafter.

Corsica is also the birthplace of Napoleon Bonaparte, who was born in Ajaccio in 1769.
